The small, four-metre-long crate was floating along in the water, according to Winnipeg Police. Police say a second truck was passing the water-logged vehicle, and one of the men inside stopped to check on the animals. "They saw that one elephant was not moving," said Sgt. Amy Sibbald. "And the second elephant was in the water, but it was pretty clear that they were both in distress." Police say the two people who were in the truck didn't notice the poor condition of the crate and stopped to check on the animals. "There was no effort to try and rescue them, as they had moved on and left the area by the time the rescue teams got there," Sibbald said. Officers found the damaged transport box and then found the two elephants near the river. The animals were both located within about four to five metres of each other. The elephants were put down using sedatives. Police say the two people who were driving the truck were given a traffic ticket for unsafe driving. Winnipeg Police say the crate that collapsed was filled with gravel to make it less likely to tip. "It's unfortunate to see that the animals would have been alive, and had they been in a better condition, that they may have been released," Sibbald said. "So at this point in time, that's our
