Category:Public finance Category:Fiscal policy Category:TaxationVision "A Painting That Makes You Cry" I want to create art that moves you to feel the emotions of a story. I am torn between painting realism and abstract art - both are beautiful to me. Light and shadow, color and texture, and the light of the soul is what I strive for in my work. I would love to know what you think, what you feel, what you see. Joanna Wolf's paintings are the antithesis of everyday life. She paints in a world that is not really here - a place of myth and magic and well worn emotions. Her strength is in telling stories through color, shape and texture. She really gets people. I feel I am getting to know her in a deeper way. The paintings in this portfolio depict people living and working in the world. She isn't a realist. She can't be. What would people be like if every movement was real and every emotion was poured out? Joanna is inspired by life around her. She is a dreamer, and dreams are life, the most beautiful parts of life.Our Story An accomplishment was born out of personal tragedy. Since 1892, our story is the story of many families who were uprooted by the Spanish-American War. A brother, Joseph, was shipped to Spain. However, one day in Spain, in 1897, the ship hit a reef off the coast of Puerto Rico and all but five of the 114 men on board were lost. Joseph was among those few. His brother Thomas went to the island and eventually married Josefina Mier, a native Puerto Rican, in 1904. They raised three children, but because of a lack of economic opportunity, Thomas, Josefina and their children had to relocate to America. They settled in the little town of Salinas, just east of San Francisco Bay. They had to take in boarders to support their growing family. Thomas and Josefina were both hardworking, loving parents. As their sons grew up and became men, they were sent to the United States to make a living
