* Adobe provides a free trial version of Photoshop for you to take advantage of. I highly recommend that you download and try out the software. To get started, click the Download button on the home page at `www.adobe.com` and enter Photoshop Express as the file type and click Download. * I learned the basics of Photoshop while working at a newspaper where we were required to hand-shoot every photo in the newspaper and then composites those together in Photoshop to print the pages. In addition to being cheap and simple, this method is very accurate. * Learning how to use Photoshop is like learning to play the guitar; it takes time. ## Opening an Image in Photoshop Photoshop is a non-trivial program. It can be confusing to use at first, especially if you're used to some other graphics programs that have a simpler interface. I will walk you through the basics of opening and editing an image in Photoshop, but you can find some additional resources online.

Q: JavaScript: How to send object with method as argument to function? So I have a function like this: function sum(num1, num2){ return num1 + num2; } And I try to call it using this function call: sum(obj.answer, obj.answer2); But I get the error: Uncaught TypeError: sum is not a function Is there a way to send object with methods as arguments to a function? A: Well, I can give two different answers: 1. Yes, there is a way You simply need to cast your object to a function: var obj = { answer: "two", answer2: "three" }; var a = obj.answer, b = obj.answer2; sum((function() { return a + b; }())); 2. No, there is no way You can not pass an object with a method, due to the fact that JavaScript only allows to call function on its values. So, you can simply create a proxy object, like: var obj = { answer: "two", answer2: "three" }; var methodFun = (function(method) { return function() { return method(this); } })(obj); var a = obj.answer, b = obj.answer2; var sum = (function(num1, num2) { return num1 + num2; })(a, b); console.log(sum); DEMO Just a second (the second one might have some flaws, but this is how it will work in all browsers): var obj = { answer: "two", answer2: "three" }; var methodFun = (function(method) { return function() { return method.apply(this, arguments); } })(obj); var a = obj.answer, b = obj.answer2; var sum = (function(

Femtosecond laser-assisted intrastromal cataract surgery. To evaluate the safety and efficacy of femtosecond laser-assisted cataract surgery (FLACS) with the LenSx femtosecond laser platform. In this prospective, single-masked study, 30 eyes of 30 patients underwent FLACS using the LenSx femtosecond laser platform. The mean age of the patients was 65.4 ± 9.7 years (range, 49-76 years). Eleven patients had a cataract grade 2, four had grade 3, and the other 15 had grade 4 cataracts. Preoperative and postoperative uncorrected visual acuity (UCVA), best-corrected visual acuity (BCVA), refractive results, and complications were evaluated. Mean preoperative UCVA was 0.75 ± 0.4 logMAR (range, 0.1-2.3 logMAR), and mean BCVA was 0.69 ± 0.3 logMAR (range, 0.1-1.8 logMAR). The mean visual acuity (logMAR) was $+0.11 \pm 0.29$ (range, -0.16 to +0.80) preoperatively and 0.16 ± 0.33 (range, -0.10 to +0.65) 6 months postoperatively. The mean spherical equivalent was -4.3 ± 3.6 diopters (range, -14.75 to +0.5 diopters). There were no significant differences in UCVA and BCVA between the femtosecond laser and phacoemulsification groups (P = 0.16 and 0.29, respectively). The median time of the procedure was 28.5 ± 5.3 seconds (range, 20-40 seconds). The main intraoperative complication was zonular dehiscence in one eye; this was treated with cataract extraction and IOL implantation. One eye required additional intraoperative hydrodissection of cortical vitreous to enhance lens cleavage. The postoperative complications included transient mild cystoid macular edema in two eyes and descemetocele in one eye. There was no permanent visual decrease. Six months after FLACS, the mean UCVA and BCVA were 0.14 ± 0.21 logMAR and 0.13 ± 0.27 logMAR, respectively. FLACS with the LenSx femtosecond
